Company Description

IAA is a leading remarketer of salvage vehicles. The company remarkets nearly 2.5 million totaled vehicles from the United States, Canada, and the United Kingdom, generating revenue from fees earned from consignors (primarily insurance companies) and a global network of buyers (including rebuilders, dismantlers, and recyclers). The company leverages strategic assets in its: 1) land permitted for salvage storage, and 2) global network of buyers and sellers. In 2019, IAA was spun off from KAR Auction Services, a leader in the whole car remarketing industry.

Competition
Salvage flow diagram. Every year, approximately 4 million vehicles are totaled in North America. IAA helps the title-holder recover the salvage value of these totaled vehicles through auctions that remarket the vehicles to rebuilders and recyclers. Its internet platform allows bidders from around the world to bid on salvage vehicles, maximizing the value to sellers.

Quick Summary
IAA beat Q1 expectations (minimum pandemic impact). Insurance assignments have plummeted since the pandemic lockdown, although the shape of the decline in road traffic is tracking with our expectations. Operationally, IAA completed the transition to all-digital auction format early, accelerating margin benefits. We like enhancements to buyer and seller tools – and a partnership with NASCAR to provide excess land capacity during catastrophes. Net, we like IAA for investors rotating into quality franchises as the crisis passes – but would brace for a harsh pandemic impact.
Investment Thesis

Valuation. Our $48 price target is based on ~16x NTM adjusted EBITDA one year from now, representing a ~15% discount to Copart's FY2 valuation (~19x EBITDA) and near the lower end of recent trends (15-19x) as investors consider the impact of COVID-19. Shares of IAA currently trade at 19x our NTM adjusted EBITDA estimate, which represents a period of depressed earnings as miles driven decline in the near term.

IAA Inc. is a leading provider of auction solutions for salvage vehicles. The company remarkets nearly 2.5 million totaled vehicles sourced from the United States, Canada, and the United Kingdom leveraging two strategic assets: land permitted to store vehicles and a global marketplace of sellers and buyers. Key investment attributes include:

- Strong number two in salvage auction duopoly with 40% share
- Wide moat embedded in land and network
- Secular growth fueled by rising total loss rate due to aging vehicle population and increasingly expensive repairs
- Limited cyclicality (revenue tied to miles driven, accident claims, and total loss frequency)
- Plans to grow revenue 5-7% and adjusted EBITDA 6-8% plus upside from consolidation activity, margin initiatives, and ancillary services

Risks & Caveats

IAA is highly sensitive to trends in the collision market, including the frequency and severity of collisions. Factors that influence the collision market and IAA as an investment include:

- Safety technology is poised to reduce accident frequency (but boost severity)
- The number and age of vehicles in operation (along with the number of miles driven) influences accident frequency
- Weather impacts total loss frequency
- Major storms and catastrophes drive volume but related costs may exceed revenues
- Fees are sensitive to demand for salvage vehicles, which may be impacted by currency and trends in emerging markets
- Revenue per unit depends upon factors like vehicle age, used car prices, and demand for recycled parts
- IAA may struggle to transition to an internet-only auction process
- IAA may struggle to expand outside of North America
- IAA may lose important relationships with key insurance customers
- Scrap metal prices may impact transaction values and related fees
- Technology investments may not drive adequate returns
- Valuation appears correlated to Copart, which has traded near historical high multiples
